

HUMILITY VS. ARROGANCE

Humility is limiting my feelings of self-importance and recognizing that everyone has strengths and limitations.

At Habitat for Humanity Buffalo, we provide opportunities for hardworking families in the city of Buffalo to own their own home. On each new project, we have volunteers and prospective home buyers come to our build sites with varying levels of experience and skill. We invite everyone in the community to be a part of what we do to serve the families in our program, giving them a hand up, not a hand out. Humility plays an important role in serving our mission. Our families, staff, and volunteers recognize that building a house is a cooperative effort and cannot be done by one person. They work side-by-side, week after week, relying on one another, sharing strengths and admitting weaknesses, in the true spirit of humility. They listen to and learn from one another. Everyone understands that, by being open to new ideas and stepping up when there is a need, they can help change the lives of our families for generations to come as they realize their dream of home-ownership.
